8. Experimentation in Teaching

- a. Convergence Projects
(PUR 4001 Public Relations Campaigns, spring 2001): Working with Professor Janice Tanaka to allow public relations students to work with telecommunication students in video production. PR students proposed and planned video projects (video news releases, public service announcements and ads) to meet public relations objectives for three clients: the Alpha One Foundation, the Florida State Board of Pharmacy and the Center for the Delaware Inland Bays. PR students wrote scripts and are working with telecommunication students in production and postproduction phases of videos.
- b. Newsroom Laboratory Instruction
(COM 252 Journalistic Writing and COM 252H Journalistic Writing Honors)
Developed an approach to teaching journalism in which students were given experiences as close as possible to actual newsroom experience. This approach included one-on-one coaching sessions. It is utilized in the weekly production of a campus page of the Journal and Courier Online. Students are encouraged to revise their writing assignments after initial grading and feedback. Articles are revised to industry standards for publication.
- c. Agency Concept
(COM 459 Publication Design.) Developed an agency approach to teaching publication design in conjunction with public relations writing and corporate video classes. Utilized Purdue's computer class accounts to coordinate the sharing of materials among classes. Produced usable publications for three clients, including the Communication Department and two nonprofit clients in the community.
- d. Socratic Method
(COM 632 Communication Law, COM 352 Mass Communication Law; COM 555 Free Speech/Free Press) Developed skills in the Socratic method of teaching constitutional principles. This method allows students to search for meaning behind platitudes and to discover how principles and theories of American democracy apply to their lives.
